

SUSPRO TPM IN GREECE

On April 15, 2025, the partners involved in the SUSPRO project gathered in Volos, Greece, for their final Transnational Project Meeting (TPM). This meeting marked a pivotal moment in the project's timeline, offering a structured opportunity to assess progress, consolidate outcomes, and ensure the completion of outstanding tasks before the project concludes in May 2025.

Hosted by the Greek partner, the Center for Education and Innovation, the gathering included representatives from all participating organizations. The primary focus of the meeting was a thorough review of the work accomplished to date, particularly concentrating on identifying remaining deliverables and final activities necessary for the successful closure of the project. Partners worked collaboratively to guarantee that no aspects were neglected and that the timetable for the final developments in May was clear and operational.

The day began with a welcome and registration session, followed by a discussion of the three key project activities and an evaluation of any remaining components. Following this, discussions centered on assessing the project's impact and exploring potential follow-up actions after its official conclusion. In the afternoon, partners committed time to project management and financial wrap-ups, ensuring that reporting and administrative tasks were properly aligned and compliant.

The meeting was held in a spirit of professionalism and shared commitment, fostering clear coordination and reinforcing the strong collaborative relationships built throughout the project lifecycle. As the SUSPRO project approaches its final phase, all partners remain fully committed and aligned in their efforts to finalize deliverables and effectively disseminate results.

The SUSPRO consortium expresses its gratitude to all partners for their continuous involvement and collaborative approach. We anticipate the successful conclusion of the project!
